Biographical / Historical Note

Alice Yarish became a reporter for the Marin Independent-Journal in 1952 at the age of 43. She moved on to the Santa Rosa Press Democrat as its bureau chief and landed at the Novato Advance in 1956. After establishing the Marin News Bureau in 1962, Yarish began covering the courts and county government along with working for the Pacific Sun and San Francisco Examiner.

Prison reform became Yarish's focus after befriending San Quentin inmate George Jackson. Yarish used her connection to Jackson to speak with the San Quentin Six during their trial for murder following the August 21, 1971 prison riot where three were killed. Her recognition of humanity towards all involved and her writing style became her trademark as a maverick journalist.

Scope and Contents

The files in this collection contain materials about the life of investigative reporter Alice Yarish, letters to news editors of television and Bay Area newspapers, notes and correspondence, and newspaper clippings of articles by Yarish and other reporters about drug abuse, California State prisons in particular San Quentin, inmates George Jackson, Larry Justice, Billy Gibson, and Caryl Chessman, gun control, hippies, Synanon, and welfare. There are files on her travels to Quito, Ecuador, the Galapagos Islands, the Sea of Cortez, and the Lesser Antilles.
