

Finding Aid for the Brockman Gallery Archive
Los Angeles Public Library Special Collections

OVERVIEW

Identifier/Call No.: LA MSS 0002

Creator: Brockman Gallery (Los Angeles, Calif.).

Title: Brockman Gallery Archive.

Dates: 1940–2020 (bulk 1967–1990).

Language: Materials in English

Scope and Contents: Contains photographs, correspondence, and print materials including ephemera, press clippings, flyers, publications, and brochures that pertain to the administrative activities, exhibitions and events of Brockman Gallery, Brockman Gallery Productions, Brockman Productions, Brockman Gallery & Associates, and Brockman for the Cultural Arts, as well as a wider community of Black artists and organizations. There are substantial records that document the art career of Alonzo Davis. Photographs include images of activities and events such as the Brockman Gallery opening night reception in 1967, Leimert Park cultural events, and mural projects, as well as portraits of artists and their work. Materials date from a 1940 article in The Pittsburgh Courier titled Moses-Davis Wedding in Birmingham Pretty that documents the wedding of Alonzo J. Moses and Agnes Lewis Moses, to recent press coverage of Dale Brockman Davis in T: The New York Times Style Magazine in the 2020 article How a Trio of Black-Owned Galleries Changed the Art World. Most of the materials were produced between the years 1967-1990, when Brockman Gallery was open for business.

Quantity: 16.59 cubic feet; 17 boxes (10 archival bankers boxes, 5 Hollinger legal document boxes, 2 oversize boxes); 219.5 GB of digital files.

Location: Rare Books, South Stacks. Los Angeles Public Library Special Collections, 630 W. 5th Street, Los Angeles, California 90071.

ADMINISTRATIVE/BIOGRAPHICAL HISTORY

Brockman Gallery, located in a storefront in the Leimert Park neighborhood of Los Angeles and founded by artists and brothers Alonzo Davis and Dale Brockman Davis, was at the root of a community of Black artists from 1967-1990. The gallery, one of the first Black art galleries in the United States, was named for the brothers' grandmother, Della Brockman. It was, for a time, supported by their work in arts education as teachers at Manual Arts High School (Alonzo) and Dorsey High School (Dale).

A goal of the gallery was to bring Black artists into the mainstream of the fine art world through exhibitions, sales, and collecting. Its role was to provide encouragement and a venue for living artists, and to promote a greater public awareness of Black artists. This was achieved through partnerships with community organizations and businesses, sales to collectors and art institutions, and by exhibiting work in a wide variety of mediums and prices. Brockman Gallery was also part of a wider Black Arts Movement in Los Angeles and Southern California in the 1960s and 1970s, alongside a number of organizations that blended community and creativity. The gallery was a precursor to the California African American Museum, and its legacy has been far reaching, as documented in the landmark 2017 book and traveling exhibition Soul of a Nation: Art in the Age of Black Power.

Brockman Gallery operated at 4334 Degnan Blvd. in Los Angeles, in Leimert Park. The location in a middle class Black neighborhood was significant for a number of reasons. A notable one was that the Los Angeles County Museum moved from South Los Angeles, near USC, to Wilshire Blvd. in 1965, which was a big cultural loss for the area. Dale and Alonzo were familiar with the neighborhood from walking to the Leimert Theater as teenagers. The gallery played a critical role in the history of Leimert Park. It connected with the local community and supported artists in many ways - with studio space, neighborhood festivals, film festivals, talks, symposia, mural projects, travel opportunities, and collaborations with other arts institutions. The location is now occupied by a public program space for the gallery Art + Practice.

The gallery promoted multiculturalism and drew visitors and artists from many communities, including other minority artists and whites. Local artists including Betye Saar, Timothy Washington, Charles White, John Riddle, John Outterbridge, Varnette Honeywood, Judy Baca, Willie Herron, and Kent Twitchell exhibited work at the gallery. Nationally known artists were exhibited as well, including Elizabeth Catlett, Romare Bearden, David Hammons, and Jacob Lawrence. Alonzo and Dale Davis established Brockman Productions in 1973, a non-profit organization that received funding from the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA), the Los Angeles Cultural Affairs department, and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Processing History

Dale Brockman Davis was an Artist in Residence at Art + Practice for 14 months during 2014-2015. After a series of conversations, Mark Bradford, a founder of Art + Practice, proposed an archival project based on Brockman. In a written description of the project, it was stated that the archive consists of 98% of the documented materials from 1967 to 1990. The saved documentation included photographs, exhibition catalogs, press materials, exhibition posters, memorabilia, and other papers. Items were stored in a storage unit and at the Davis home in two archival boxes, six milk crates, and two filing cabinets. As the first resident, Dale, assisted by Devon Oder who was hired as an archivist for the project, focused on digitizing the Brockman Gallery Archive. The goals of the project were to list items in a database, and to implement a plan to archive the materials, and to develop a plan to house the archive. Another goal of the project was for Davis and Art + Practice to create a publication drawn from highlights of the Brockman Gallery Archive. The publication was not realized.

Davis wrote about the project:

“A lost history due to a lack of interest, ignorance, negligence, lack of resources or any other reason can result in major losses to our shared cultural experience. I stepped into the role of archivist for many reasons. First of all the ephemera belonging to Brockman Gallery was housed in two storage areas, my home and in a rented storage facility close to my home. Secondly after I retired from teaching for 35 years with the Los Angeles School District I had a tremendous amount of flexible time to avail myself of these materials. Credit must be given to the interest generated by the numerous graduate students whose research projects brought an early recognition of the need to organize these materials and to make them more easily accessible. What is missing from this informational equation is the unnerving amount of physical ephemera collected over twenty years of publishing announcements, invitations, press releases, slides, photographs, newspaper articles, minutes from meetings, and so on. We have estimated that we saved approximately 98% of the physical records of this important history. These boxes, full file cabinets, slide organizers, art portfolios, and racks of original art works and posters, had been left in a very orderly manner but were so numerous that when the uninitiated observer looked inside the storage room it appeared to be a locker out of control. Floor to ceiling and door opening to the rear wall!

This history had been housed there for about 25 years in a somewhat ideal situation; it was cool, dark, dry, and secure. When my brother and I decided to close the gallery we had a series of volunteer and paid assistants to bring some basic order to the records that we had saved over the twenty years that the gallery existed. Items were in many instances categorized by activity or alphabetized for example by artists names but very little in chronological order.

In addition to the numerous individual graduate research projects there were other major projects that motivated us to be more proactive with this archive:

- The City of LA Dept of Cultural Affairs catalog of African American Artists in Los Angeles survey exhibition
- LA Rising / Southern California Artists before 1980 / Lyn Kienholtz
- LA Object / David Hammons Body Prints / Tilton and Charlwood
- Now Dig This / Art and Black Los Angeles / Hammer Museum

With each publication the need for more information and more ephemera became ever more important.

August 1st of 2014 was my first day as the artist in residence at the A+P foundation. I have been given 14 months to formally archive the Brockman history. This opportunity began with interviews of prospective archivists whose credentials were screened but choosing the person with the right "fit" was up to me. As part of my do [sic] diligence I spoke with several archival specialists to help me determine the best person for the assignment as well as what kinds of challenges I should expect to encounter. There were conversations about the length of time given to perform this task, where the physical archive might be housed, and how it would be funded. Would the general public have access to these valuable resources and who would be responsible for it's [sic] care and maintenance. Planning ahead for the future of this project is equally important as the formal announcement of its presence. Virtual access to these records will be a relatively easy task that will prove to be research worthy. Questions as to who might house the physical records and large number of visuals that will accompany it are being discussed and researched. Access by Secondary educational institutions are foremost on my wish list, having been an art instructor for so many years and understanding the great needs of our youth in a system that has systematically deleted the visual arts curriculum from its offerings and past required subjects.

My archivist Devon Oder is the right fit. She comes to this project having a Master's degree from Art Center and five years of archival experience. Another benefit is that the very specialized scanning equipment that has been provided by A+P is the same equipment that she mastered at her last assignment. There was no learning curve for her, but a beginning experience for me. Working this process of giving order to this vast number of materials, strategizing the effort, and actually performing the tasks of digitizing has been enlightening. Sitting side by side quietly entering the data until questions arise gives an organic quality to the process. We compare, contrast, and cross reference the materials as they're being processed. No questions go unanswered as items are given coded letters and numbers with accurate descriptions accompanying all entries.

Providing background information daily makes contextualizing easier and actually a fun experience. This is working from the inside out as opposed to an historical approach. Certain ephemera prompt stories which add to the highly enriched archival process which will help researchers more thoroughly understand the value of this effort."

A press release titled "The Los Angeles Public Library Announces Acquisition of the Brockman Gallery Archive" dated March 22, 2019 stated in part:

For Dale Davis, the Brockman Gallery was all about giving the local community a voice by showcasing African American and other underserved artists, representing the minority communities in Los Angeles. A major goal was to draw a young black person in the community walking by the Gallery in to see a reflection of him or herself in that creative space. For Dale, the goal was to "build a multiethnic community with art as the tool." As a former Secondary school instructor, access to the archive by students is foremost on his wish list, due to the "great needs of our youth in a system that has systematically deleted the visual arts curriculum from its offerings and requirements."

Family History

Brockman Gallery was named for Della Brockman. The family name dates back to the 1850s, to the great-grandfather of Dale and Alonzo Davis, Aaron Brockman. He was the son of an enslaved Black woman and was born in the Brockman mansion in Greenville, South Carolina. Aaron's oldest daughter, Della Brockman, was educated at Clark University in Atlanta, where she met and married Stephen E. Moses. The couple moved to Alabama and established themselves as educators, a value and livelihood that was embraced and practiced by future generations. The Brockman family name is meaningful to Dale and Alonzo Davis as part of their family history as Black Americans.

Dale Brockman Davis and Alonzo Davis spent much of their childhood growing up near Tuskegee University in Alabama, where their father was a professor of psychology. Alonzo J. Davis earned a master's degree from Howard University and was a Professor of Psychology at Tuskegee Institute. Agnes Lewis Moses Davis graduated from Talladega College, and taught at the Birmingham Public School. Her parents were the educators Prof. S.E. Moses and Mrs. S.E. Moses. Following the divorce of their parents, Dale and Alonzo moved with their mother, Agnes Moses Davis, to Los Angeles from Tuskegee, Alabama in 1955 as part of the Great Migration.

Agnes Moses Davis, the mother of Dale and Alonzo, also known as Chief, and their aunt, Louise J. Moses, were engaged supporters of Brockman Gallery, and influential community leaders in their own right. Louise Moses and Agnes Davis were charter members of the California Librarians Black Caucus. Before passing, the sisters were continual supporters of the Caucus. Louise Moses was employed by the Los Angeles County Public Library and developed innovative reading programs for young people at Juvenile Hall and in the Compton community. Louise Moses ended her career as a Supervisor of the AC Billbrew Library, a Los Angeles County Public Library. Agnes Davis was a Children's Librarian at the Los Angeles Public Library.

Series 13: Duplicate Print Materials

Box Description

17 Duplicate materials

Duplicate materials were separated and set aside in a box stored with the archive. In cases where duplicate materials were present, the three best copies were kept in the file, and remaining duplicates were set aside. It is intended that these materials be used in exhibits and displays to help prevent handling and wear on archive materials.
