ADMINISTRATIVE HISTORY

Fire management is integral to the management of Yosemite National Park's natural and cultural resources. Since 1970, National Park Service (NPS) fire policy has shifted from mandating the suppression of all fires toward a strategy that allows certain wildfires and prescribed burns to be used as tools for meeting land management and public safety objectives. Restoring fire to its natural role in Yosemite National Park is now one of the fire management program's highest resource management priorities. Yosemite's fire program presently works out of the main Fire Management Office (FMO) in Yosemite Valley and is part of the Visitor Protection Division. A continual leader in the implementation of NPS fire management policy, Yosemite's fire management program employs a variety of methods to accomplish fire and resource management objectives, thereby reducing the risk of unwanted fires and providing public safety and resource protection. The program operates under the guidelines of the park's 2004 Fire Management Plan, which leverages strategies that are the result of a half century of fire research and experiential knowledge. A framework for managing wildland and prescribed fires, the plan aims to restore and maintain ecosystems, reduce hazardous fuel loads, protect nearby communities, and safeguard cultural and natural resources.

Before Yosemite became a government-protected tract in 1864, Native Americans managed fires strategically, burning meadows in order to amplify acorn and grass harvests. The cessation of Native American burning coincided with the enforcement of a fire suppression philosophy inherited from the Army and the U. S. Forest Service (USFS), upon which the National Park Service relied for assistance in firefighting. Yosemite became a national park in 1890 and part of the NPS when it was established in 1916. All fires in Yosemite were suppressed since the 1920s and in some parts since the mid-19th century, regardless of size or location. In addition to increasing fire hazards due to the accumulation of vegetation and woody debris (fuel layers), this century-long policy of suppression has severely altered park vegetation and wildlife ecosystems, especially in the meadows of Yosemite Valley and the Giant Sequoia groves, which rely upon fires to reproduce.

Due to the early NPS reliance upon the USFS for fire control, Yosemite had no fire personnel until 1928, when John D. Coffman was hired as the first Yosemite Fire Control Expert. In 1929 under Coffman, the NPS initiated a fire control plan distinctive to the park service but derived from the USFS plan. The Crane Flat Lookout was built in 1931 to improve fire recognition and starting in 1933, New Deal programs provided the NPS with resources to approach fire management more independently. The Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) maintained fire breaks, suppressed forest fires, and constructed the Henness Ridge Fire Lookout and Miguel Meadow Guard Station in 1934.

Fire management in the NPS in the 1940s and 1950s continued to be challenging because of lack of resources. Around this time, wildland and structural fire responsibilities were moved from the Chief of Forestry office in the Maintenance Division to a new branch under the Visitor Protection Division. This staff was responsible for the suppression of wildfires, and fighting structural fires, as well as assisting with search and rescue operations.

Yosemite did not have any major fires during this period and public education programs stressed fire prevention because of the large number of human-caused fires. The majority of the fires into the 1960s were caused by lightning and individuals and were mostly inconsequential. Besides the Rancheria Mountain fire of 1948, a Class “E” fire and the largest, most costly fire on record to date, larger fires didn’t begin to appear until the late 1960s—a consequence of the emphasis placed upon fire suppression during the early and mid-twentieth century.

In the meantime, the NPS reassessed its fire management strategies. Yosemite discovered that suppression of natural fires disrupted ecosystems and altered park vegetation and wildlife habitat, thereby diminishing visitor experience. Still, changes to the fire suppression policy were only seriously begun because of the recommendations of the Leopold Committee in 1963, which advocated for the restoration of park ecosystems through a variety of mechanisms, including prescribed fires. It was the Committee’s vision that each park be restored, as nearly as possible, to the conditions that existed when Europeans first visited the area. In Yosemite, the recommendation heralded a return to a landscape similar to the one that Native Americans cultivated. The resonating natural resource management vision of the Leopold Committee inspired the NPS Green Book in 1968. Revolutionizing NPS policy, the Green Book recommended that fires be allowed to burn. The rich environment of fire research and science theory at UC Berkeley (led by Doctor Harold Biswell) also influenced NPS fire policies, especially at nearby Yosemite. Throughout the 1960s, experiments in controlled burning showed a marked increase in the reproduction of Giant Sequoias, a treasured natural resource in Yosemite.

These scientific and aesthetic developments instigated a new fire management philosophy that revolved around wildland fires and prescribed fires. When wildland fires, ignited by lightning, occur in certain designated areas of the park, they are allowed to burn. Lit by resource managers, prescribed fires are the deliberate application of fire to wildlands in order to achieve specific resource management objectives.

Yosemite became one of the first national parks to introduce prescribed fire into its mixed conifer forests and meadows, leading the development of the NPS prescribed burn program. In 1968 Yosemite hired Robert Barbee, the park’s first natural resource manager, to research and draft a fire management plan that incorporated the new burning policies. The plan was completed in 1969 and quickly gained momentum with foresters and other naturalists. By 1970, the first prescribed burns occurred in Foresta Village and Mariposa Grove, initiating the use of Prescribed Natural Fires (PNFs) in Yosemite. In 1972 the park began to allow naturally-ignited wildland fires in the higher elevations to burn (following on the heels of Sequoia and Kings Canyon National Parks).

Barbee and Biswell were instrumental in the design and implementation of the first prescribed fire program (instituted by the summer of 1970). The program is founded on concepts of ecosystem management and uses three tools to maintain ecological stability and biological diversity: prescribed fires, mechanical thinning, and wildland (natural) fires. In 1970, prompted by the new National Environmental Policy Act and inspired by the 1968 Wild and Scenic Rivers Act, Barbee authored Yosemite’s new Environmental Restoration Plan. Suggesting that Yosemite’s ecological problems could be mitigated through the manipulation of planned fires, this plan reflected the national ecological mood, which supported the scientific guidance of NPS policies and the federal regulation of environmental issues.

Prior to the early 1970s, most members of the fire staff were trained as foresters instead of as natural scientists. The change in fire policy prompted a departmental reorganization. In 1969, an office was created in Wawona to house the prescribed fire program, led by Barbee. This program, still in existence today, is responsible for designing and implementing Yosemite's prescribed burning program, as well as for managing fire research, educating the public, manipulating natural wildfires to accomplish environmental restoration, and reducing fire hazards. The office operates under the Fire Management branch of the Protection Division but also works closely with the Division of Resources Management and Science. The establishment of the Wawona office prompted the separation of wildland and structural fire management and, thus, their records. The urgent, emergency response required for structural fires differed extensively from the resource management approach of wildland fires. Therefore, the time-sensitive management of suppressed fires and emergency situations continued to be based out of the Fire Management Office in Yosemite Valley. Despite the park's embrace of prescribed burning, fire staff will suppress all fires if weather and environmental conditions are not ideal, if the fire was human-caused, or if its location is in a Fire Suppression Zone (17% of park). This zone includes developed areas and ranges with high fuel loads.

An NPS-wide prescribed fire program took longer to gain momentum because of political pressure and the public's response to the risk of fire. The Boise Interagency Fire Center (BIFC) was established in 1969 to unite federal land management divisions in their cause. The NPS Fire Management Staff Directive 76-12 of 1976 articulated the use of fire in NPS fire management programs and explained terminology and procedures for visitors and staff alike. This order and the efforts of the BIFC led to the development of the NPS's Fire Policy Directive (NPS-18) in 1977, which superseded all previous policies and changed the face of fire management. The mandate outlined management strategies, implementation procedures, and guidelines for prescribed burning while emphasizing that the ultimate priority was to protect lives, facilities, and natural and cultural resources.

With a NPS-18-approved prescribed fire plan in place and the arrival of Jan van Wagtendonk around 1970, Yosemite became the forerunner in fire management. Van Wagtendonk received his PhD in fire ecology from UC Berkeley, where he studied with Dr Harold Biswell. An expert on planning prescriptions for fires, van Wagtendonk had authored the influential Natural, Conditional, and Prescribed Fire Management Plan of 1979. Prescribed fire was a common practice in Yosemite in the 1970s and by the 1980s they were a leader in wildfire planning and management.

A perpetual concern in fire management, the lack of resources, was addressed by the FIREPRO program in 1981. The national program quantified fire management needs and provided guides for achieving resource management goals. FIREPRO was instituted at a fortuitous moment for Yosemite, which entered a 20-year drought cycle in 1985 already heavy with unnaturally-accumulated fuel loads. In 1986, these conditions fermented in the American West to create the worst year in fire history; 1987 was even worse. The August Heat Complex fires of 1987 threatened groves of giant sequoias along with nearby communities, eventually leading to the closure of portions of the park. The intensity of these fire seasons underscores the threat of fire to national parks and highlights the extensive and enduring costs of fire suppression.

In 1988, the Fire Management Program was hobbled by the effects of the fires in Yellowstone, where Barbee was now superintendent. The science of fire management became a political issue. On August 23, 1988, under public pressure, NPS director William Penn Mott declared a moratorium on all prescribed burns in national parks. After review, the NPS revised the order NPS-18 and created new fire management guidelines, which required parks to forward fire management plans for approval.

Yosemite's Prescribed Fire Program was challenged again in 1990 during another bad fire year in California. In August, a group of fires, including Arch Rock and Steamboat, were ignited by lightning in suppression zones. Efforts failed to stop the spread. Popular areas were threatened, and the park was closed for the first time in history—and during its celebratory centennial summer. Though Yosemite avoided much of the controversy that plagued Yellowstone during its fires, it could not deflect the media, which was still engaged in debating fire management policies in national parks. Nevertheless, instead of derailing the progress of fire management, the NPS responded with renewed vigor and designed new strategies that have been met with evident success over the ensuing decades.

On the heels of a big wildfire season in 1994, the NPS completed the revised Federal Wildland Fire Management Policy and Program Review Report in 1995. The goals and actions of this report encourage a proactive, cooperative, uniform, ecological approach to fire management, emphasizing the urgent and enormous task of reintroducing fire to reduce risk and improve ecosystems. The new policy allowed for flexibility in types of fire responses and led to greater cooperation among federal land management agencies. The necessity of interagency coordination was demonstrated during 1996, a calamitous fire year for all of California—and particularly for Yosemite, which suffered severe fire conditions and a large number of lightning-caused fires. Limited resources exacerbated the situation until finally, under a unified NPS and USFS command, the fires (Ackerson Complex) were extinguished.

The Structural Fire Program utilizes the fire management suppression strategies of its more well-known relative, the prescribed fire program. The Structural Fire Program operates within fire suppression zones that include communities and areas with a high concentration of forest debris. Fire crews staff both wildland and structural fire engines for these communities, with some crews responding to fire suppression calls as well as to prescribed and wildland fires happening in the park. The helitack crew is also part of the Fire Management branch and operates out of the Crane Flat Fire Lookout. Wildland fires account for the largest helicopter usage in Yosemite. The aviation program supports wildland fire suppression, prescribed fire management, search and rescue, medical evacuations, and administrative operations. Reports for these operations are generated in the Yosemite Valley office and in various offices around the park. For all of these missions, agreements with other agencies—such as USFS, CAL FIRE, Bureau of Land Management (BLM), Mariposa County, and the park's main concessioner—are in place to provide assistance and promote more effective sharing of resources.

By 1997, the effects of decades of fire suppression could be seen in the prevalence and magnitude of fires in the American West, including the Yosemite Complex Fire in Yosemite. The increase in catastrophic fires and the expansion of Wildland Urban Interface Areas (WUI) made interagency cooperation a major fire management objective. Fire education also became vital and sparked the establishment of the Public Information Office (PIO) in 1999 to focus on educating the public about fire management in Yosemite and the ecological advantages of fire. By the year 2000, another series of drought years prompted changes in fire management operations, and prompted new policy development. Yosemite's fire management policies are guided by the NPS management policies, Director's Order #18 (1998), and the 2001 Federal Fire Policy. The Director's Order #18 guides the development of policy relative to fire management and dictates the program requirements for fire management plans.

The 1990 Yosemite Fire Management Plan was revised in the Yosemite Fire Management Plan/Environmental Impact Statement of March 2004 in compliance with the 2001 Federal Fire Policy. As the working document that guides the fire management program, this plan mandates the increased application of prescribed fire and calls for additional methods of hazardous fuel reduction in order to transform threatened areas into more natural, balanced landscapes. The Operational Fire Management Plan of 2009, which builds on the 2004 plan, is the working document for implementing fire management actions. The existing program includes wildland fire for natural and cultural benefits, wildland fire suppression, prescribed fire, fire prevention, fire education and outreach, fire ecology research, and mechanical methods of reducing fuel loads. The Fire Management Office uses the goals and objectives established in fire management plans to improve planning of prescribed fires and responses to unplanned fire, all the time maintaining public safety as its main priority.

Fire Management Records 1930-2010 (bulk dates: 1969-1999)

CATALOG NUMBER YOSE 232940

VOLUME 71.8 LF

DESCRIPTION The collection contains materials relating to the park's fire program and details the fires that occurred in Yosemite National Park. The records were created by Yosemite's fire program between 1930 and 2010 with the bulk of the material dating from 1969-1999 being compiled and created by the Fire Management Office. Yosemite National Park has been at the forefront of fire management, and its records exhibit the evolution of National Park Service fire policy, especially in relation to Yosemite's prescribed fire program. The strength of the collection is found in the thorough assemblage of incident reports, which comprise final, concise reports for every fire that occurred in the park between 1931 and 1999. When read alongside administrative files and various fire management planning documents, these records provide an overview of decades of fire management strategies and of the impact that these shifting policies have had upon Yosemite National Park's ecology and resources.

The collection's contents include fire incident reports (both wildland and structural), fire inspections, annual fire season reports, search and rescue reports, prescribed fire plans and research, administrative files, fire management plans and planning documents, fire narratives, weather data, correspondence, cooperative agreements, newspaper articles, press releases, fire perimeter maps, charts, photographs, and materials relating to high water incidents and major fires in Yosemite National Park. Also included in the collection are Crane Flat Lookout and Henness Ridge Lookout visitor registers, panoramic lookout photographs from a United States Forest Service (USFS) project in the 1930s, and the Yosemite fire atlases, which contain maps and statistics related to park-wide fire control between 1930 and 1970.

Please note that all series and subseries have accompanying scope and content descriptions. It is also important to note that Yosemite's fire program was not given the title of Fire Management Office (FMO) until the 1980s; nevertheless, for consistency this document refers to the park fire program as the Fire Management Office or FMO throughout the collection.

ORGANIZATION

The collection is organized into ten series according to record function, original office filing system, type of material, and topic. Most series are arranged either chronologically or by NPS alphanumeric codes as established in the NPS -19 Disposition Schedule.

Series I: Fire Incident Reports (Forest & Structural) contains the early fire records, which include forestry reports and exemplifies suppression as the overarching fire management policy. Beginning in 1970, all fire incident reports were divided by category of fire; thus, records after 1970 are split into two series, Series II: Structural Fire Reports and Series III: Wildland Fire Reports. The structural fire records comprise fire inspection, annual, and incident reports. The wildland fire records consist of annual and individual fire reports, as well as documentation related to major fires in Yosemite. Series IV: Non-fire Incident Reports comprises high water reports from the floods of 1995 and 1997 that were filed separately from the fire reports. Series V: Fire Weather Data incorporates disparate weather records found throughout the collection. Series VI: Administrative Files contains central files, correspondence, and general office files that pertain to the administration of fire management in the Yosemite National Park. Materials relating to Yosemite's prescribed fire program originate from a branch office and were organized into Series VII: Prescribed Fire Program. The fire atlases, lookout items, including an Osborne Fire Finder, and panoramic photographs each comprise a separate series due to medium and specialized content.

PROVENANCE

The collection was created by the Yosemite fire program between 1930 and 2011. The title of Fire Management Office (FMO) did not occur until the 1980s, nevertheless, for consistency and since the majority of accessions were received later from the Fire Management Office, the creator of the records is referred to as the Fire Management Office throughout the collection.

The materials were deposited in the archives in several batches from 1992 to 2012, with the bulk of the material arriving in 2008. The collection has nine associated accession numbers: YOSE-5737, YOSE-5739, YOSE-5957, YOSE-6362, YOSE-6386, YOSE-7144, YOSE-7179, YOSE-7184, YOSE-6759. The primary accession number, YOSE-5737, was the first installment of records, and YOSE-7144 was the largest. The initial deposits were first delivered to the Yosemite research library and then sent to the archives. Many of these accessions (YOSE-5737, YOSE-5739, YOSE-5957, YOSE-6362) were part of the Protection Division collection reflecting the management of fire activities by this division and were transferred to the Fire Management Office collection in 2011. Accession, YOSE-6759: Rancheria Fire-Dispatcher's Log, 1948, was discovered in the Protection Division records in February 2012 and added to the fire management office records. Most of the fire management office records were previously stored in the records management storage area in the El Portal warehouse or collected in 2008 from the Fire Management Offices located in Wawona.

SERIES DESCRIPTIONS

SERIES I: Fire Incident Reports (Forest and Structural), 1931-1969 2.0 LF

This series comprises early Yosemite National Park fire records, created by the chief forester and superintendents from 1931 to circa 1950s and by the park fire program thereafter. These records mainly focus on forest fire information, although some structural fire and forestry data is included. The majority of the annual fire records include a brief narrative summary, the Superintendent's Annual Fire Report, and a narrative forestry report with photographs. These records provide an overview of the fire program's evolution and the beginning years of fire management in the park. The records are imbued with information of enduring value to fire ecology and resource management in national parks.

There are few early records, most of which are Superintendent's Annual Fire Reports (1931-1943). These reports contain narratives, charts, photographs, and maps that summarize fire season activity. Annual reports for 1943-1946 are missing. Annual reports from 1947 to 1952 include individual fire summaries and narrative reports (providing data on structural fires and forestry activities). Other noted reports of this era include Summary of Fire Data, 1931-1935; Twenty-Five Year Fire Record, 1933-1952; and The Fire Control Plan of 1949. Although ninety percent of this period's fires caused little damage, the 1948 Class "E" Rancheria Mountain Fire was the largest and most costly fire to date. The entire Dispatcher's Log and the Board of Review Report are included in this fire's records.

Individual Forest Fire Reports (Form 10-400) begin in 1953. This form documents fire location (with map), acreage burned, time record, action record, suppression costs, and additional data. Some fire records supplement Form 10-400 with a brief narrative provided by the fire dispatcher/district ranger. Throughout the 1950s, larger fires were assigned Supplemental Report for Class "C" Fire forms (10-401), which contain longer narratives, photographs, maps, and Board of Review Reports. Many photographs capture aerial views of fire and helicopter action. The 1960s bring an increase in Class "C," "D," "E," and "F" fires, which also use Form 10-401.

Beginning in the late 1950s, annual fire records include a summary of the forest fire season, initially prepared by the park superintendent and later using the Forest Fire Report Summary (Form 10-420). Additional annual reports are the Fire Season Summary (comparable to the 10-400 form) and the Annual Forestry Report—a detailed report, often supplemented with photographs, discussing forest fire control, the construction of fire protection, forest insects, tree maintenance and disease, soil and moisture conservation, and grazing. All three of these reports appear into the 1960's. Other notable reports include The Flood of December (1955); Agreement between Yosemite and El Portal Volunteer Fire Brigade, (1959); Needle Miner Control Project – Yosemite (1959); and Board of Review Reports for two Class "D" fires: Mather Fire (1959) and Mt. Gibson Fire (1960).

The individual reports for structural fires begin in 1956 and utilize the Individual Fire Report for Buildings on Government Property forms (10-402). This form is also used for automobile fires. Occasionally, an Individual Fire Loss Report (DI-210) and a narrative report accompany the 10-402. Beginning in 1963, structural fires are given separate report folders, which contain DI-210 forms as well as reports and photographs of larger fires, including the Badger Pass Lodge fire of 1964 and the Glacier Point Hotel fire of 1969.

Since 1963, each year's fire records have included the three annual summaries (10-420, Fire Season Summary, and Annual Forestry Report), as well as a 10-400 form. Revised in April 1964, 10-400s now include more information about fire plan specifics and fire area, providing burning and build-up indices and analyzing types of vegetation burned. The mid-1960s brought a change in fire numbering; chronological numbering terminated in 1964 with Fire ID 953. After 1965, each calendar year's fire identification numbering starts over at "001."

Three significant fires occurred in 1968, two of which were the first Class "F" fires in the park (Canyon Fire - Class "F", Poopenaut - Class "F", Union Point Fire - Class "D"). Additional reports from 1968 include a Report of the Board of Review and Fire Season and Comparative Data 1964-1968, as well as the new forms 10-398 (Fire Log - Class "A" & "B" Fires) and 10-397 (Fire Report Summary).

Overall, the majority of the fires in the 1950s and 1960s were caused by lightning and human negligence. Mostly insignificant (Class "A" - 0 to .25 acre) or small (Class "B" - .26 to 9 acres) fires, each year's annual total was between fifty and one hundred fires. Larger fires (Class "C," "D," "E" and "F") begin to appear in the late 1960s. These statistics illustrate the effects that the fire suppression management style and its subsequent consequences have had upon the park.

The series is arranged chronologically, with given dates referring to fiscal, not calendar, years (October to September) until the mid-1960s, when the records are dated by calendar year.

SERIES II: Structural Fire Reports, 1969-2000 11.0 LF

This series is organized into two subseries, Structural Fire Incident Reports and Fire Inspections, which are arranged chronologically.

The series contains incident reports and annual summaries relating to structural fires from 1970 to 1998, as well as fire inspection reports of NPS buildings from 1966 to 2000. The series reflects the record-keeping history of the Fire Management Office (FMO); beginning in 1970, the records for structural fires were filed separately from the wildland fire records. Consequently, the fire types now comprise two separate series—Series II: Structural Fire Reports and Series III: Wildland Fire Reports.

Subseries A: Incident Reports, 1970-1998

The Structural Fire Incident Reports subseries contains documentation for fires that affected buildings or automobiles within Yosemite National Park from 1970 to 1998. The reports are comprised of NPS incident forms, photographs, and annual summaries.

There is sparse documentation from 1970 to 1975; available forms from this period include Report of Accidents Other than Motor Vehicle (10-231a), Report of Accident/Incident (D1-134), and Investigation Report of Motor Vehicles Accident (10-413), which replaces form D1-134. Beginning in 1973, the most prominent form in this subseries, Yosemite National Park Structural Fire Report, appears. This document provides information such as incident number, location, date, type of situation, actions taken, identification of property involved, probable cause, course of fire, and number of firefighters and volunteers involved. The annual summaries that begin in 1974 are a comprehensive source of fire information. The Annual Alarm Number Logbook report, created in 1974, becomes a major component of fire reporting after 1977. (Every fire event and false alarm is assigned an individual, chronologically-motivated alarm number.) In 1980, the structural and wildland fire crew based in the Valley began to respond to search and rescues (SARs), which are also assigned an alarm number.

Additional annual reports are the Structural Alarm Summary (1982-1998) and the Year-End Report on Structural Fires (1977-1980), which is renamed the Structural Fire Report Summary (1980-1998, with some gaps). Annual reports include a brief narrative and provide a yearly summary of alarm-related information, such as incident type, location, date, estimated value lost, and vehicle and employee costs. Summaries are included with reports until 1984, when they are given a separate folder (Structural Fire Reports—Annual Summaries), filed at the beginning of each year.

The FMO worked in partnership with the Yosemite Park and Curry Company Fire Department and with the El Portal Fire Department, and reports from both agencies appear in this series. In 1985, the Interagency Report of Incident and Dispatch Action becomes a prominent document, appearing with almost every Structural Fire Report. This form contains fire alarm number and location, as well as a transcription of the fire alarm call to dispatch. Please note that the Chatterton House Fire—Alarm 4 has its own folder in 1988.

The structural fire reports are arranged chronologically.

Subseries B: Fire Inspections, 1969-2000

This subseries consists of records generated from fire and safety inspections of NPS buildings. The first group of records (1966 -1971) pertains to the annual inspections of NPS and concessionaire buildings. The reports include a narrative description and lists of deficiencies and correction recommendations. Some later reports contain lists of corrected and outstanding hazards.

The later fire inspection records (1974 -1992) pertain only to government housing and to buildings owned and operated by the NPS in the main districts of the park (Yosemite Valley, Wawona, El Portal, Hodgdon Meadows, Crane Flat, Tuolumne Meadows and Foresta). Between 1974 and 1978, each building's inspection is described by the Fire Inspection Guide (Form 190), a one-page form that includes a checklist for external and interior inspection, a list of fire extinguishers, and some additional notes. A summarized list of a particular area's deficiencies is available for some years. No inspection reports exist between 1993 and 1998; in 1999 and 2000, a new form, Housing Fire Inspection Report, comprises a list of items that require maintenance and an Omega Sprinkler Inventory.

Also contained in this subseries is correspondence between the fire management officer, park superintendent, Yosemite Park and Curry Company chief operating officer, and building residents. Prominent inspections include Badger Pass Ski Lodge (1966-1971) and the Wawona Hotel (1975, 1980). In addition, maps of the Valley district show fire hydrant placement.

The subseries is arranged chronologically.

Please note that additional fire inspection reports, specifically the Glacier Point Hotel reports for 1947-1949, are located in Series III: Administrative Files—Subseries A: Central Files.

SERIES III: Wildland Fire Reports, 1970-2001 41.3 LF

The series is organized into three subseries: Annual Reports, Wildland Fire Incident Reports, and Records of Individual Fires, according to record function and original order. The subseries were arranged chronologically in anticipation of future accretions.

This series contains fire reports created by the Fire Management Branch Offices that focus on the management of wildland fires, both natural and prescribed. Taken together, the reports in this series display great changes in Yosemite's fire management styles over the past fifty years. They also exhibit the shifting trends in fire causation (especially with regard to human-ignited fires), the big fire years, and the introduction of prescribed fire. Starting in 1970, these files were maintained separately from structural fires by the fire dispatcher, who organizes all material relating to specific fires, emergency incidents, and search and rescue operations (SARs), including the incident commander's Final Fire Report (Form 1202). The Fire Management Office (FMO) works closely with the aviation program to manage and suppress wildland fires and to coordinate Search and Rescue operations. In fact, wildland fire management accounts for the largest use of Yosemite's helicopter. These missions are included in the wildland fire records. Also documented are significant interactions (and mutual aid) between the FMO, local communities, and the United States Forest Service (USFS). The records consist of annual reports, individual fire reports, and supplemental documentation pertaining to major fire incidents in Yosemite. Detailing fire trends, significant events, actions taken, operational lessons learned, and the long-term impact of fire on specific resources, these reports have enduring value for managing natural resources in Yosemite.

Subseries A: Annual Reports, 1970-2001

This subseries comprises annual fire reports summarizing the past year's fire events, as well as the activities of the fire staff and the aviation crew. From 1970 to 1990, the major annual reports are the Summary of the Fire Season, Summary of Helicopter Use, and the Reportable Fires Log. The Summary of the Fire Season inventories the number and types of fires by class, the distribution of fires by district, the causes of fires, the methods of fire detection, the costs of fires by type, and the size of fires. The Summary of Helicopter Use details the helicopter contract and the helicopter services provided to Yosemite. Statistics are given for each major cause of helicopter usage: fires, search and rescue operations, administrative travel, and miscellaneous use. On occasion, a Helicopter Use Report, which provides additional flight information, is included. The Reportable Fires Log, along with the sometimes available Fire Season Summary Log, is an annual list of individual fires by chronological number. This log includes information such as fire name, date, location, class, cause, discovery, and case and account numbers.

After 1991, each year's key report is the Fire Occurrence Summary, which provides an annual overview of fire types, acres burned, and fire causation. Also included is the Fire Number/Fire Account Log, which lists individual fires by fire number, followed by fire name, account number, and start date. Around 1996, Prescribed Natural Fire (PNF) Summaries appear, as well as reports that offer incident information totals and cost summaries. Finally, dispatch and radio logs are present for some years.

The subseries is arranged chronologically.

Subseries B: Incident Reports, 1970-1999

Each folder in this subseries houses a single wildland fire or incident. Fire documentation consists of an Individual Fire Report and/or a record of dispatch action with a few supporting records. Although the design of the Individual Fire Reports changed significantly between 1972 and 1999, all generations of the form contain key information such as fire number, fire location, fire code and class, method of fire detection, fire cause, timeline of fire and fire response, fire magnitude, and a short narrative summary of the incident. The most prominent form, Individual Fire Report (Form DI-1201), was used to document fires beginning in 1974; it was replaced by Form 1202 in 1984. In 1987 the FMO introduced the Interagency Report of Incident and Dispatch Action (R5-5100-226), which features frequently in the subsequent records. In addition to these forms, this series also contains perimeter maps, photographs, criminal incident investigations, detailed reports for extensive or planned burns, correspondence, fire narratives, and weather information. Some prescription fire folders contain prescribed burn plans, a Request to Burn report, Incident Action Plans, task lists and objectives for the future, fire and weather data, and justification for the fire.

The majority of the series is concerned only with fire, though there are records of search and rescue (SAR) operations and responses to medical emergencies, rock falls, floods, and other natural occurrences; in most of these instances, the FMO assisted in a protection or air support capacity. Reports pertaining to SAR operations and other incidents include a Report of Incident and Dispatch Action. They contain a brief description of the event and minimal personal information.

Every individual fire or incident within a calendar year receives a consecutive fire number. In the early years, this number is accompanied by a code (e.g. N=Natural, M=Management, SAR=Search and Rescue, FA=False Alarm). Beginning in 1988, fire numbers are preceded by the letter code W- or N-. They are arranged chronologically. A complete run of the original copies of the Individual Fire Reports (Form DI-1201) can be found in the beginning of each year from 1974 to 1986. During that same period, each year's compiled SAR rescue reports follow the DI-1201 forms. After 1986, the SAR reports are chronologically integrated into the other fire records and given a chronological fire number.

Noted individual fires are Let Burn #18, 1974; Curry Village Fire, 1975; Washington Fire, 1976; El Cap Prescribed Fire, 1978; Lake Eleanor Prescribed Fire, 1978; Big Trees Prescribed Fire, 1979; Pate Valley (W-020), 1985; Cascade Creek (N-029) and Eleanor (N-052), 1986; Glacier Point (W-016), 1986; Larson Incident /September Trouble, 1987; Kibbie Wildland Fire (PNF), 1997.

The subseries is arranged chronologically.

Subseries C: Major Fire Incidents, 1968-1999

This series provides an overview of the management of larger fires and groups of fires, managed simultaneously as complexes. Given their similar origins, the records in this subseries have many corresponding features. The files for most fires include Incident Status Summaries (ICS-209), Individual Fires Reports (original copies), Fire Situation Analysis reports, weather data, photographs, fire perimeter maps, summarized narrative reports, newspaper articles, and press releases. Incident Action Plans (IAPs), day and night shift plans that enable one to follow the progress of these significant fires, also appear frequently. They contain maps (which illustrate fire progression, division assignments, fire lines, and air transportation), incident objectives, operation assignments, division assignments, safety messages, weather forecasts, fire behavior narratives, air operations summaries, medical plan information, radio communication information, and demobilization schedules.

The organization of this set of records, which contains separate files for individual fires, was preserved in order to maintain the original filing system of the FMO. The subseries is arranged chronologically to allow for additional accretions. Each sub-subseries is arranged first by record purpose if necessary and then chronologically.

Sub-subseries 1: Canyon Fire, 1968

The Canyon Fire began on September 23, 1968, when truck exhaust ignited several fires along Highway 140 outside of the Arch Rock entrance station. Suppression efforts were quickly begun but the weather conditions, exacerbated by a period of prolonged drought, caused the fire to advance quickly towards the Arch Rock Entrance and later threatened the community of Foresta. The fire was declared under control on September 26, 1968, after burning 1840 acres. Other records include interagency and superintendent correspondence.

Sub-subseries 2: Buena Vista Fire, 1981

The Buena Vista Fire began on June 30, 1981, in the Illilouette Valley of Yosemite National Park, a Natural Fire Management Area. Within a month, unacceptable smoke pollution and extreme fire conditions prompted the decision to suppress the fire. The fire was controlled on July 28 after burning 2,000 acres.

Sub-subseries 3: August Heat Complex , 1987

The August Heat Complex consisted of five major fires sparked by lightning strikes between June 29 and August 7. The fires are Frog (6/29), Campground (7/14), Betty Blake (7/17), Lost Bear (7/23), and Wawona (8/7). Although initially managed as prescribed natural fires (PNF), smoke impact intensified and the fires approached areas of human development and sensitive resources. The fires were suppressed by August 9, after burning 3,426 acres. The file contains summary documents for the Complex as a whole and for individual fires; an Area-wide Action Plan; infrared photographs; and fire perimeter maps with archeology, plant, and wildlife constraints.

Sub-subseries 4: Walker Fire, 1988

Lightning ignited the Walker Fire on June 21 along the Tioga Road in a natural fire management zone. The fire was declared a prescribed natural fire (PNF) and allowed to burn until July 21, when extreme fire danger warranted its suppression. The Walker fire burned 3,450 acres and was contained on July 24. The file also includes rehabilitation plans and public information. This fire was showcased on NBC's Today show on July 31, 1988.

Sub-subseries 5: A-Rock and Steamboat Fire, 1990

The A-Rock and Steamboat Fires were sparked by lightning on August 7. The A-Rock fire started near the Arch Rock entrance station and progressed towards El Portal, Crane Flat, Big Meadow and Foresta, where structures and private homes were burned. Many areas of the park were evacuated, including Yosemite Valley. The Steamboat fire began in the Sierra National Forest's Merced River Canyon and spread towards Yosemite West and Badger Pass. Yosemite and the Sierra National Forest jointly managed these fires with a suppression strategy that emphasized air attack.

The fires were contained by August 20, when the Valley was reopened. A prominent record is the Yosemite Re-Opening Plan.

Sub-subseries 6: Ill Fire, 1991

On September 2, a fall thunderstorm ignited the Ill Fire on the east side of the Illilouette Ridge, a prescribed natural fire zone. Heavy smoke in the Yosemite Valley during the third week of September, coupled with the fire's escape of its designated prescribed natural fire perimeter, prompted a new management plan of suppression. The fire was contained on September 29 and burned 3,814 acres. This file also includes a Fire Recovery Plan, infrared images, and fire maps with transparencies that show the fire history in the area.

Sub-subseries 7: Horizon Fire, 1994

Sparked by lightning on May 31, the Horizon Fire burned 3,860 acres in the Illilouette Creek drainage region (near Glacier Point Road). The fire was managed as a prescribed natural fire (PNF) for sixty-nine days. However, on August 8, the fire jumped its management area. Suppression began on August 9, and the fire was contained on August 15. Other records in this file are the Final Fire Package, the Horizon Fire Rehabilitation Plan, air quality plans, infrared photographs, and fire progression maps. Also included are narratives pertaining to the progress of the prescribed natural fire and the subsequent escaped fire situation.

Sub-subseries 8: Ackerson Complex, 1996

The Ackerson Complex was a series of thirteen fires ignited by lightning on August 14, 1996. In total, 60,000 acres (47,000 in Yosemite, 11,000 in Stanislaus National Forest, and 1,300 of private land) burned before the fire was extinguished on September 6, 1996. Records for this fire are very thorough and include a rehabilitation plan, correspondence, Escaped Fire Situation Analysis (EFSA), and photographs of Aspen Valley homes. Noted reports include the Ackerson Complex (AC) Summary Report, the AC Burned Area Emergency Rehabilitation (BAER) Plan, and a FARSITE projection map.

Detailed topographical maps for the Ackerson Complex, which display fire lines, sensitive areas, structures, and hotspots are located in Series VII: Prescribed Fire Program (Series 007—Box 004—Folder 0041—Wawona Office-Ackerson Maps, 1996—Oversize and Sensitive—ARPA).

Sub-subseries 9: Yosemite Complex, 1999

Beginning in July of 1999 and burning through the late summer of that year, the Yosemite Complex of fires is an archetypal example of Yosemite National Park's approach to Wildland Fire Use for Resource Benefit (WFURB). A WFURB is a management strategy for naturally-ignited wildland fires that leverages the fires to accomplish specific, pre-stated resource management objectives in predefined geographic areas. The Yosemite Complex was managed in three different geological locations; the North Park and South Park fires occurred in regions that are largely dominated by wilderness, and the Dark Fire occurred one mile south of the Tioga Road and one-and-a-half miles north of Yosemite Creek Campground. The North Park Fire, 10,678 acres, contained eight smaller fires, which occurred between August 10 and August 31. The South Park fire, 1,487 acres, consisted of two smaller fires, which burned between July 13 and September 1; 280 acres were burned in the Dark Fire (July 15 – August 31), making the Yosemite Complex a 12,445-acre fire. There are WFURB reports for each of the Yosemite Complex's small fires. These contain an initial fire assessment and spot weather reports along with observational records pertaining to smoke, onsite weather, and fire behavior. The Fire Information Office (FIO) also contributed documentation to this subseries, including visitor-targeted reports about the fires.

This subseries is organized first by record purpose, and then chronologically. The subseries begins with major reports, which are followed by daily reports, logs, cost analyses, and other communication documentation.

SERIES IV: Reports of Other Incidents, 1995-1997

1.0 LF

This series is divided into two subseries, High Water Incident 1995 and High Water Incident 1997. The records from these two high water incidents were filed separately; thus, each was given its own subseries in order to retain original order. The series is arranged chronologically with the expectation that additional accretions will occur.

This series contains records of special incidents within the park that required the assistance of fire management personnel. Considered 'essential personnel,' the fire staff is obligated to aid in emergency situations. The two serious high water incidents contained in this series are emblematic of the fire management crew's involvement in extraordinary emergencies. In these situations, the fire personnel suppress structural fires caused by flood damage, aid in patrolling roads, engage in air operations (especially those involving emergency access and evacuations), clear trees and debris from roadways and trails, establish safe transportation routes, assist in the evacuation of non-essential people, and, most importantly, provide for the safety of personnel and guests.

Materials in this series document the fire crew activities and include incident narratives, correspondence, Incident Status Summaries, evacuation plans, and items distributed by the Public Information Office. Primary among these documents are Incident Action Plans, which are also used to follow the daily progress of major fire incidents. These reports discuss incident objectives, division assignments, safety messages, weather forecasts, and information relating to air operations and road conditions.

Subseries A: High Water Incident, 1995

High Water Incident 1995 occurred in March 1995. A large storm with heavy rain and wind caused rockslides, mudslides, and road undermining that resulted in the closure of two of the three primary access roads into Yosemite National Park. With the help of essential fire personnel, Highway 41 was opened four days after the storm (March 14th); Highway 140 was opened a few weeks later, after sewer pipe repairs. In addition to typical materials, this subseries contains a film and color photographs of road damage.

This subseries is arranged chronologically and loosely by subject.

Subseries B: High Water Incident, 1997

An early snow pack and a warm tropical storm at the beginning of January 1997 led to High Water Incident 1997. Flooding along the Merced River became Yosemite's largest flood in forty-two years. Notably, it was also the most damaging flood in park history, remaining Yosemite's worst natural disaster to date. Extensive infrastructure damage led to the closure of many areas of the park—including Yosemite Valley, for two and a half months. The fire management crew was integral to flood recovery efforts; their work is documented in daily Incident Action Plans between January 21 and March 13.

This subseries is arranged chronologically and loosely by subject.

SERIES V: Fire Weather Data, 1941-1999 (bulk dates: 1979-1999) 5.3 LF

This series comprises fire weather data for Yosemite National Park. Reflecting the evolving significance of weather in fire management, the files are organized by year and primarily include weather-collection data from the fire season of May through October. Depending on the decade, these reports helped to track, suppress, control, and/or predict fire locations. In more recent years, statistics for extra-atmospheric conditions appear (such as fuel moisture), providing important information about an environment impacted by decades of fire suppression. As a result of this detailed, supplementary data, weather reports influence whether fires are suppressed, controlled, or prescribed.

For the most part, the documents were generated within Yosemite National Park from weather stations at Crane Flat Lookout, Wawona, Yosemite Valley, El Portal, Mariposa Grove, White Wolf, Indian Flats, Henness Ridge Lookout, and Tuolumne Meadows. (Areas of observation vary depending on time period.) The series' most prevalent forms are: Fire Weather Observations, 10 Day Fire Danger and Fire Weather Record, and Weather Observation Recording Sheet WIMS Requirements Stations [Remote Automated Weather Station (RAWS), or manual station]. These forms display similar information, such as dry bulb temperature, lightening frequencies, wind (speed and direction), precipitation, humidity, burning index, fuel moisture, and human-generated risk. The Fire Weather Observations form provided this information from 1961-1990. The form of the 1940s, U.S. Department of Commerce Weather Bureau, was renamed three times, becoming Fire Weather and Burning Index Record in 1945, Ten Day Fire Danger and Fire Weather Record in 1966, and finally Weather Observations Recording Sheet WIMS Requirements in 1994.

The Green Up weather program appears in 1979. Its records provide weather information such as burning index (BI), ignition component (IC), and spread component (SC) for major areas in the park. They also include The National Interagency Fire Center (NIFC) Daily Situation Reports, which describe fires occurring on federal land. In 1987, this form's title changed to (Fire Weather) Indices. Until 1995, Green Up and (Fire Weather) Indices' information originated at the Fresno Fire Station/Yosemite National Park. After 1995, the weather forecast came from the Hanford Fire Weather Office/National Weather Service. Beginning in 1987, the National Fire Danger Rating System (NFDR) spreadsheet was comparable to the Green Up reports and included the Keetch-Byram Drought Index (KBDI). These fuel models represent the "typical" fuel situation in each fire-danger rating area. Also created in 1987, Affirms: Weather Input sheets contain information about location and acreage of new fires, current fires, and prescribed burns, as well as analyses of and prognoses for activity within Yosemite National Park.

This series is arranged chronologically.

Please note that fire weather reports can also be found in Series I: Fire Incident Reports, in files for larger fires, and in Series III: Wildland Fire Reports.

SERIES VI: Administrative Files, 1931-1998 (bulk dates: 1969-1986) 6.0 LF

The series is organized into three subseries: Central Files, Chronological Files, and General Office Files. Both the Fire Management Office (FMO) filing system and the files' relation to the alphanumeric codes established in the NPS-19 Records Disposition Schedule prompted the organization of these records. The central files contain NPS file codes, by which they are filed. The chronological files have various codes and are organized by date, whereas general office files do not have codes and are arranged chronologically.

The administrative records in this series were created and compiled by the fire management program between 1931 and 1998. The bulk of the records was created by the main FMO in the Yosemite Valley between 1969 and 1986. The records consist of a variety of materials and address a wide range of topics regarding fire management in Yosemite and the National Park Service.

Subseries A: Central Files, 1931-1996 (bulk dates: 1969-1979)

The records in this subseries were coded according to the NPS-19 Records Disposition Schedule and include Administration, Development and Maintenance, Fiscal, History, Lands and Recreation, Personnel, and Fire Management files. The fire management program created these files between 1931 and 1998 with the bulk of the records generated by the main Fire Management Office in the Yosemite Valley between 1969 and 1979.

The majority of the records are coded Y: Fire Management and contain the codes Y14: Fire Management and Forestry and Y18: Range Conservation and Management (Y-files, 1931-1998, with the bulk of the records dating from 1969 to 1979). The materials consist of correspondence, fire management plans, fire statistics and reports, prescribed burning unit plans, articles, manuals, maps, and photographs. The records discuss the role of fire in Yosemite's ecosystems, fire management boundaries, fire history, the FIREPRO pilot program, cooperative agreements, weather reporting techniques, fire behavior, and fire management policies and procedures. In general, the Y18 files document prescribed burns and naturally occurring forest fires in the 1970s; specifically, they cover the implementation of prescribed burns in Yosemite in 1970. The files contain documentation of suppression activities, the management of unplanned ignitions, plans for prescribed fires, prescribed burn activities, fire season information, report forms, safety, personnel, public response, conferences, and equipment. Prominent reports include YOSE Lightning Fires Log Book, 1931-1975; Tuolumne River Corridor Fire History, 1931-1976; 1964 Fire Control Plan, and Natural Conditional and Fire Management Plan of 1979.

The majority of the Administration Records (A-files, 1936-1987) are coded A76: Protection, and contain correspondence regarding safety matters, accidents, flood preparedness and probability action plans, conferences, inter-agency agreements, and fire management plans. Other records include tort claims and fire inspection reports, like the Glacier Point Hotel reports for 1947 to 1949.

The Development and Maintenance Records (D-files, 1978-1983) are mainly coded D50: Utilities, and pertain to water and fire protection systems, inspections of employee quarters, fire hydrant and building maintenance, and fire system inspections. Additional inspection reports can be found in Series II: Structural Fire Reports—Subseries B: Fire Inspections.

The bulk of the Fiscal Records (F-files, 1974-1987) were deemed temporary and removed from the collection while some of the correspondence about fire management in Yosemite was retained, such as that relating to FIREPRO funding, job positions, and emergency payroll.

Records in the History files (H-files, 1978-1982) discuss fire suppression systems in historic buildings, such as the museum and chapel. A few Land Records (L-files, 1963-1980) consist of land deed files, Notification of Closing reports, and land division maps that document the transfer of titles to the United States government between 1974 and 1980. All Personnel Records (P-files, 1958-1986) were temporary and removed from the collection with the exception of Yosemite-specific correspondence pertaining to fire personnel (employee welfare, hazard pay, EEO programs, in-service training programs, job descriptions, and Incentive Award suggestions). Also included are attendee lists for structural fire training conducted at Yosemite from 1982 to 1986.

This subseries is arranged first by alphanumeric code (as established in the NPS-19 Records Disposition Schedule) and then chronologically.

Please note that the administrative records that pertain to the prescribed fire program, compiled by the Fire Management Office located in Wawona, can be found in Series VII: Prescribed Fire Program.

Subseries B: Chronological Files, 1985-1987

This subseries contains the chronological file for the years 1985 and 1986. The chronological file is internal park memorandum and public correspondence generated by the FMO that retains its original order and is not filed according to the established NPS-19 codes. Most correspondence is authored by Chief Fire Management Officer Donald L. Cross, with some from Park Superintendent John M. Moreland. This correspondence covers a variety of topics including training, personnel, equipment, and neighboring forest requests.

Subseries C: General Office Files, 1930-1998

This subseries comprises a variety of administrative records created between 1930 and 1998 that were found throughout the collection. The materials consist of correspondence, reports, contracts, manuals and guides, form samples, promotional brochures, and photographs that cover a wide range of topics including safety and fire suppression training, heli-jumping, firefighting equipment, fire management tactics, fire control activities, prescribed fire program, personnel, funding, FIREPRO program, and Emergency Medical Staff (EMS) training. The records contain fire season summaries, a legal agreement with the U. S. Forest Service, and the Fire Regulation Handbooks published by the U. S. Forest Service between 1937 and 1976. These publications exhibit the USFS influence on the early years of fire control management in Yosemite. The photographs depict the short-lived heli-jumping program in the 1960s (of which there is also a film), the Echo Valley fire of 1970, the Fire School of 1980, the Yosemite Fire Department circa 1930, and the veteran Fire Control Aide, Alfred Heyne. Also of interest is the Lake Eleanor Log Book, which contains entries by fireguards between 1961 and 1968.

This subseries contains administrative records that have not been coded according to the NPS-19 Records Disposition Schedule. The series is organized loosely by record purpose and arranged chronologically.

SERIES VII: Prescribed Fire Program, 1969-2000

2.5 LF

This series contains records created and used by the Prescribed Fire Office, currently located in Wawona. This office operates within the Fire Management Office (FMO) and focuses on the planning and implementation of Yosemite's prescribed fire program, introduced in 1970 as a management tool for environmental restoration and with the goal of reducing fire hazards. Spanning 1969 to 2000, the records address the management and history of prescribed burns and prescribed natural fires in Yosemite. The records are arranged chronologically and include prescribed fire management plans, fire reports, maps, charts, GIS/GPS information, weather data, comparative plans, correspondence, and articles.

This series covers a variety of topics important to prescribed burning, including air quality and smoke management, response to wildland fire, fuels management, weather, experimental burns, and implementation plans and procedures. Many of the prescribed fire program's early records were gathered by Jay Johnson, frequent 'Burn Boss' of prescribed burns from 1969 to 1985. His files contain maps, plans, research notes, reports, articles, and the Environmental Restoration Program for YOSE, 1970. Later records show that in response to the revised NPS fire policy of 1995 there was an expansion of prescribed fire programs, educational efforts, and fire research, as well as improvements in fire weather forecasting and interagency cooperation.

Due to the high risk of unplanned consequences, prescribed fire is a controversial activity. Yosemite's Wildland Fire History Database was created to lessen the threats posed by mismanaged data, to support decisions, and provide accountability. The database was generated from annual reports, 1930-1994; GIS information; the Cumulative Record of Prescribed Burns in YOSE, 1970-1997; and the 1989 report of Jack Knieriemen, which details fire history in the Sequoia groves. As Yosemite began increasing the number of prescribed fires and unsuppressed, managed natural fires in 1997, air quality and visibility became key considerations. Many materials related to smoke management and air quality were gathered in response to these concerns, as well as for the development of the State Implementation Plan (S.I.P). Noted reports consist of smoke management plans, programs for minimizing air pollutant emissions, and the Cumulative Record of Prescribed Burns with Valley Emissions Inventory, 1970-1997.

Additional documentation includes information useful for planning prescribed fires such as fuel loading, photo series that provide a graphic summary of fuels and fire behavior, and GIS/GPS information used to generate maps of planned prescribed burns. Also included are GIS-based topographical maps of natural and prescribed burns in Yosemite, which were generated by the Wildland Fire History Database project (1993-1994). Reports, such as Archeological Concerns for Prescribed Burns, 1998-2000, address the effects of fires on cultural resources, as well as the impact that such resources have upon the design of fire plans. Other fire reports include the Annual Prescribed Fire Schedules, Prescribed Burning Unit Plans, condition charts for fire prescriptions, prescribed fire exemptions, fire incident reports, and timber build-up burn index. Prominent fires represented in this series are the El Portal Hazard Fuel Reduction Project, 1990, and the Ackerson Complex, 1996.

The series is arranged chronologically.

Please note that other administrative records regarding prescribed fires have been coded Y14 or Y18 and can be found in Series VI: Administrative Files.

SERIES VIII: Yosemite Fire Atlases, 1930-1970.5 LF

The two Fire Atlases of Yosemite National Park were in active use between the years of 1930 and 1970. Created as living documents to assist in forest fire control, the atlases contain statistical data (such as annual fire summary reports, fuel load indices, burning indices, and fire danger ratings) and a variety of maps. By far the most prominent of these, Fire Occurrence Maps, are annual or decade-spanning documents that identify the size, location, and cause of all fires. Although the decade-long Fire Occurrence Maps were supposed to be updated yearly, most only record fires from the earliest years of each decade. Other maps include Personnel Location Maps, which illustrate the size and status of staff at various stations throughout the park; Travel Time Maps; Roads Maps, which identify paved roads, secondary roads, and trails; Fuel Fire Hazard Maps; Lookout Visibility Maps; and maps that illustrate proposed aids to firefighting (such as water management developments). As the years progress, the maps become more detailed, as do the corresponding reports. In the early days of this collection, maps and reports illustrate fire name, location, cause, and suppression costs; later documents include visibility, elapsed time of fire, and manpower required. In the 1950s, the reports lengthen as more fires are documented. A small amount of carbon-copied correspondence between the Yosemite superintendent, the supervisors of Sierra and Stanislaus National Forests, and park employees is also present in the atlases, often stapled to other reports.

Volume I (1930-1970) contains the bulk of the maps, including the most elaborately colored and intricately detailed maps in the collection. Volume II (1930-1959) largely consists of annual fire summaries, though each year in the 1930s has a Fire Occurrence Map attached to the Summary Fire Report. Located in the Volume I box, the "Fire Atlas" write-up is a chapter extracted from a larger book (of unknown origin), dating from before 1955 and targeting NPS fire personnel. Providing a thorough overview of the fire atlas and dictating guidelines for the creation of atlas maps and reports, this document is a vital tool for understanding the atlases.

Each atlas has a hard binding, and metallic pins at the spines have been removed for conservation purposes. Measuring twenty by twenty-two inches, both contain folded maps, which, when extended, increase the size of each atlas by twelve to fifteen inches in both length and width. These folds, as well as the brittleness of the paper and a generous array of adhesive, tape, and staples, make the atlases extremely fragile objects.

The series is arranged according to the original order of the documents bound in the atlas.

SERIES IX: Fire Lookout Items, 1930-20101.0 LF

This series comprises a variety of items from Yosemite National Park fire lookouts. Most materials in this series derive from the Crane Flat and Henness Ridge Fire Lookouts. Built in 1931 and included in the National Register of Historic Places, the Crane Flat Fire Lookout was one of four California fire lookouts built in the National Park Service Rustic style. The other such lookout in Yosemite, the Henness Ridge Fire Lookout, was a 1934 Civilian Conservation Corps project in Yosemite West. Designed to blend into the scenery, these lookouts provide a sharp contrast to the metal fire towers of the United States Forest Service (USFS). The Crane Flat Fire Lookout also houses the oldest the Helitack Station in the park service.

This series contains two Fire Lookout Registers from the Crane Flat Fire Lookout (signed by visitors, 1951-2010), and two from the Henness Ridge Fire Lookout (1945-1980). While the Crane Flat logs do not have covers, the Henness Ridge books retain their original covers, one of which is hand-made and decorated; the other is traditionally bound with hard covers. Also included in this series is a memorial dedicated to fire control officer Alfred Heyne (active at Crane Flat, 1943-1976). This memorial comprises ten black and white photographs of Heyne, mounted on red velvet backing and surrounding a metal, dedicatory plaque. One photograph shows Heyne sitting next to a bound Crane Flat Fire Lookout Register. Also present is a poem ("Lookout Tower") written by Fire Control Aid Bill Binnewies in 1955, with an attached photograph of Binnewies.

Finally, the series includes an undated Osborne Fire Finder, a circular metal plate covered in a 360-degree topographic map. Designed to display a full illustration of the horizon at an unknown fire tower, this wheel would provide fire personnel in the lookout with information vital to locating any visible smoke. It is possible, although not certain, that this wheel was designed for the Temporary Fire Lookout (1930), the location of which is illustrated by a map in a corresponding folder.

The series is arranged by item type and subject and housed in four oversized boxes.

SERIES X: Panoramic Fire Lookout Photographs, 1934-1935, 1937 1.5 LF

This series consists of a set of forty panoramic photographs taken from fire lookouts and lookout points (proposed lookout sights) in Yosemite National Park. Most photographs were taken in 1934, though a few date to 1937. They appear to be part of a U. S. Forest Service (USFS) project conducted around this time, although scant documentation about the photographs and about the USFS project exists in the National Park Service (NPS) archives. Accompanying the images is a letter to Superintendent C.G. Thomson of Yosemite National Park, dated 1935 and signed by the project photographer, Lester M. Moe, USFS forester/photographer. The letter lists the panoramic photographs to be donated to a variety of Yosemite locations and is paired with a distribution list that outlines the specific photographs to be given to each ranger station, office, and lookout in Yosemite National Park and in Sierra and Stanislaus National Forests. The letter and envelope mention enclosed vertical angle scales (to assist with image viewing), but these are not present in the collection. Lookout points in Yosemite National Park contemporaneous with these photographs were the Merced Grove (Crane Flat) Lookout, Aspen Valley Lookout, Henness Ridge, Signal Peak, Pilot Peak, Smith Peak, Sentinel Dome, Bald Mountain, Wawona Point, and Wood's Ridge.

These photographs provide excellent documentation of Yosemite's topography in the 1930s. Covering 120 degrees of the horizon, they were utilized for many decades by Yosemite lookouts to accurately locate forest fires. Today, in addition to conveying information about historic road and trail locations, changes in vegetation and landscape, and geomorphology, they provide a visual juxtaposition to later photographs that is useful for a variety of scientific, management, and administrative purposes.

The majority of the photographs are tri-fold, mounted on heavy cardboard, and marked with tabs identifying the vantage point. The prints often contain information such as date, photographer's initials (L.M.), and location. The photographs were originally housed in a green wooden box specifically designed for these images, stenciled "Panoramic Photographs."

The photographs in this series are arranged first by date of exposure, and then by location of lookout point.
