Biography/Administrative History

Eric Rofes (August 31, 1954–June 26, 2006) was a gay activist, educator, and author who wrote or edited 12 books. He grew up in Commack, New York. He graduated from Harvard University and went on to receive a master's degree from the University of California, Berkeley in 1995 as well as a doctorate in social and cultural studies in 1998. He was appointed to the White House Conference on the Family in 1980. He became director of the Los Angeles Gay and Lesbian Center in the 1980s. In 1989, he became executive director of the Shanti Project, a nonprofit AIDS service organization in San Francisco. He resigned in 1993. In 1998, Rofes wrote "Dry Bones Breathe: Gay Men Creating Post-AIDS Identities and Cultures," in which he argued that the AIDS crisis had passed and gay men needed to free themselves from the sense of emergency and victimhood. He was a professor of Education at Humboldt State University in Arcata, California, and served on the board of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force and White Crane Institute. One of the last projects he worked on was the creation, with Chris Bartlett, of a series of "Gay Men's Health Leadership Academies" to combat what he saw as a "pathology-focused understanding of gay men" in safe-sex education.

Series 11: “Gay Men’s Social Networks and Sexual Cultures in the United States, 1973-1982” project files

(13 cubic feet). Donated in January 2019.

In the mid-1990s, Rofes recognized that some journalists were espousing a simplified view of gay male culture in the 1970s. He sought to create a more nuanced portrait of gay daily life from the early period of gay liberation up to the point that AIDS was consciously felt by the community, roughly 1973-1984. The project was to gather and preserve data on gay men’s social networks and sex cultures during this period. To that end, Rofes conducted oral history interviews with 100 gay men from diverse ethnic and geographic areas in the United States, and he collected supporting material: periodicals (some quite rare), club flyers, ephemera, and correspondence.

The audio-recordings of these interviews and their transcriptions form the core of the addition. Respondents were candid with Rofes and each interview includes the signed release which specifies the level of restrictions. His interview questions included: What did it mean to be gay during this period? What sexual acts did gay men practice during this period and what did these acts mean to them? What kinds of social networks did gay men construct at this time and how did these social networks relate to sex cultures, political activism, and community building? How were gay men organized (e.g. politically, socially, etc.) during this period and how did they relate to broader mainstream institutions (the media, medical profession, the church, and the state)?

Exhibit 1. External hard drive. Contains digital audio files; digital transcripts; Rofes key writings; project background.
